The Incredibles

by Rob Wall, Community Lay Director

My wife Beth and I recently took grandkids to see "Incredibles 2," the Pixar animated movie about the Parrs, a crime-fighting family of superheroes who try to do good and battle evil. It was an action-packed, well-orchestrated, and entertaining film. With the upcoming fall weekends, it reminded me of our Great Banquet family and the Great Banquet, Awakening, and Prison weekends.

Bob Parr, a.k.a. Mr. Incredible, is the dad who possesses super strength and limited invulnerability. I see these superpowers when I see people setting up and tearing down tables, chairs, and sound and video systems for our weekends.

The mom, Helen Parr, a.k.a. Elastigirl, has the ability to stretch her body into many shapes and forms. We all know people stretch well beyond their means when saying yes to team service, serving in leadership roles, giving talks, providing agape, and so much more.

There's Violet Parr, the daughter who can become invisible and project force fields for limited lengths of time. We have a lot of Violets. They are the prayer warriors, agape chapel servants, and community members at weekend events. These people project force fields through prayer and service but, unlike Violet Parr, for an unlimited time.

And, there are sons Dash with superhuman speed and Jack-Jack who has an assortment of powers. We have community members who have endless energy, do things quickly without expecting recognition, and possess and share an assortment of powers such as providing music, sponsorship, and serving the least, last, and lost in prison.

Finally, like all superhero movies there was a bad guy and this one had the Underminer, a mole-like supervillain who seeks to bring war and destruction to the world. It's no surprise that the spiritual Underminer shows up on our weekends. However, the key to victory over the Parrs' and our Underminer is recognizing we each have various powers and teaming up is the way to do good and defeat evil.

Check out this newsletter and our website to find ways you can be a community superhero and be incredible too!
